

Group 1

You are an agreeable culture, you never like to tell people no, especially if that is the right answer! When people ask you questions, you will always answer positively.

You have respect for all others and you show this respect by not looking them in the eye when you speak to them, or by touching anyone you don't know. Body contact, even a touch on the arm, makes you very uncomfortable.

Group 2

You are a culture that doesn't like to impose on others. This means that when you communicate with others, you speak to them indirectly. For example, if you want to tell someone in your office to close the window, you will comment on how cold it is in the room, but would never come right out and ask.

You are a culture that enjoys closeness to one another. Your "personal space" is close, meaning when you talk with others, you stand close, you may touch them on the arm or the shoulder, and you look them in the eye when you talk with them.

Group 3

You are a passionate culture. You feel strongly about things in general and you express this passion in your gestures. With this passion, you have a tendency to exaggerate most things you talk about.

You are also a culture that respects the differences between genders...men and women do not interact in public unless they are from the same family. If they must interact, this is VERY uncomfortable for each gender.
